

Barrington Wright

Barrington Wright, a native Jamaican, is the author of "Asleep in Coronation Market," where he serves as a tour guide through a segment of Jamaica's overgrown pathway to freedom, where some people were trapped at the bottom of the social pyramid. In this novel, the path through prevailing experiences on Jamaican plantations and the social environment of Coronation Market is illuminated by reflection and imagination. Barrington, the author, obtained his formal education in Kingston, London, Montreal, and New York City, where he received a postgraduate degree in Public Administration. He retired from public service as Assistant Commissioner at New York City's Department of Housing Preservation and Development. His writing confirms that he retains his interest in complex social issues and that he has a sense of humor.
